Me playing my original "When the Moon Fell" live at the Bluebird Cafe in Nashville. One of the darkest and most redemptive songs I've ever done, at one of the most famous open mics ever. Not that that matters. It was still an open mic. Some amazing musicians there, people my age who are far more talented than I will ever be. But I think that what I am trying to do musically and lyrically was dramatically different from the others, and that it stood out. Especially since I performed last and closed the night. Who knows.
